

IP assets, which constitute high-value technology, but may be applicable in more mature markets. While our various proprietary IP rights are important to our success, we believe our business as a whole is not materially dependent on any particular patent or license, or any particular group of patents or licenses. In addition, IBM owns or is licensed under a number of third-party patents, which vary in duration, relating to its products.